TITLE by Vuk Jeremic

On February 17th, 2008, the ethnic-Albanian authorities of Serbia's breakaway province of Kosovo unilaterally declared independence (UDI), against the will of the UN Security Council and in contravention of my country's Constitution. We made it immediately clear that we would never recognize UDI, implicitly or explicitly. This position will not change. Serbia will continue to use all diplomatic resources at the disposal of a sovereign state to oppose Pristina's attempt at partitioning our country. No democratic and proud nation—whose territorial integrity is under threat—would act differently.

From the onset of this grave crisis, we responded to UDI peacefully. In October 2008, the General Assembly of the United Nations overwhelmingly approved a resolution seeking the legal opinion of the International Court of Justice on the lawfulness of UDI.

After many months of deliberation, the Court delivered its findings. It neither endorsed the view that UDI is a unique case, nor Pristina's claim that Kosovo is a state. Moreover, the Court failed to approve the province's avowed right of secession from Serbia, or any purported right to self-determination for Kosovo Albanians.

Instead, the Court chose to narrowly examine the language of UDI. This strictly technical approach made it possible to say that the text of the declaration itself did not violate international law. The Kosovo Albanian authorities are deliberately misinterpreting the Court's views as a legalization of their attempt at secession.

This may produce extensive and deeply problematic consequences for the international community. Ethnic minorities across the globe could take advantage of the opportunity to write their own declarations of independence according to the Kosovo textual template. This would put them in a position to plausibly claim it to be sufficient for their respective acts of secession to become acceptable, and for their proclaimed independence to be in conformity with international law.

The inherent dangers of such a scenario must be prevented. Otherwise, the borders of every multiethnic state would be permanently threatened by secessionism, producing lasting instability throughout the world.

The Court has left it up to the UN General Assembly to manage the political repercussions of the advisory opinion. This has been confirmed by UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon, who stated that the General Assembly "will determine how to proceed on this matter." The forthcoming debate will therefore focus on the consequences and implications of Kosovo's UDI in light of the Court's findings.

We must ensure that the outcome of the debate makes a positive contribution to global governance. A realistic approach must be found to close the Pandora's box opened up by Pristina. The only way forward is to commence peaceful negotiations between the parties that produce a compromise, mutually-acceptable solution to the problem.

The consequence of a failure to agree on Kosovo would be the establishment of a universally applicable precedent that provides a ready-made model for unilateral secession.

Serbia is committed to working with the international community to prevent such a disastrous scenario. What we seek is an equitable outcome that both sides can embrace. This is the only way to reinforce shared priorities, normalize relations, and complete the democratic transformation of the Balkans into a stable, prosperous region fully integrated into the European Union.

Serbia Reacts to the ICJ Advisory Opinion on Kosovo's Unilateral Declaration of Independence

For immediate release**

July 22, 2010

WASHINGTON – Earlier today at The Hague, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) addressed the legality of the 2008 Unilateral Declaration of Independence (UDI) by authorities in Pristina. The court restricted itself to a highly technical matter and ignored the core issue of secession. We believe the opinion has serious implications for nations dealing with secessionist movements.

"Serbia remains committed to using every available means to peacefully resolve this situation," said Ambassador Vladimir Petrovic, Serbia's top diplomat in the United States. "Allowing Pristina's declaration to stand represents a dangerous precedent for nations around the world facing secessionist movements. No nation or region is immune now from secessionist threats."

The opinion of the court will have no effect whatsoever on Serbia's position that it will never recognize unilaterally declared independence. Serbia will continue to defend its territorial integrity and address the question of Kosovo through political and diplomatic means. The immediate concern of the Government of Serbia is to maintain peace and stability in Serbia and in the region.

"We will continue to fight for our right and just policy at the UN General Assembly. This is the next step in the process. Serbia plans to initiate a resolution which ensures that this issue is resolved through negotiations in a way that does not initiate a dangerous precedent to the international legal order," said Petrovic. "We will address the issue of secession and all of its implications at the highest political and diplomatic levels."

Subject: In Case You Missed It: Terror Hits Serbian Protesters

Earlier today, a terrorist attack involving a hand grenade was perpetrated against Serbian civilians participating in a peaceful protest in Mitrovica, resulting in one killed and 11 injured with shrapnel wounds.

Serbian President Boris Tadic, who has postponed a trip to Montenegro so that he may attend an emergency meeting of the UN Security Council on Tuesday in New York, has called upon international institutions to react fiercely so as to protect law and order in Kosovo. President Tadic also called upon the international community to react to the attempts of destabilization in the province. "As the president of the Republic of Serbia, I urge all international institutions to react in the gravest manner so as to protect the law and order in Kosovo-Metohija and prevent provocations and threats to peace," he said.

President Tadic has stated clearly that Serbia will not respond to provocations which threaten the stability of the region.
